MOKENA GARDEN CLUB NOTES

The Mokena Garden Club met with Mrs. Edward Smith, Tuesday September 24th.

Mrs. A. Braun, president opened the meeting by reading a poem of her own composition entitled, "September Garden" truly an inspired and beautiful poem.

Mrs. J. Balaz acted as secretary in the absence of the regular secretary, Mrs. A. C. Hall. Letters of thanks were read from Mrs. C. Erickson and Mr. O. Bartels. Mr. Bartels in expressing his appreciation for the plants the Ladies of the Club gave him said, they would be placed in the window of the bank.

Mrs. A. Steele read an instructive article about shrubs. Mrs. J. Balaz also read an article on "Rock Gardens", after which there was a discussion on both shrubs and rock gardens.

After the meeting the ladies gathered in the garden of Mrs. Wm. Lowe each expressing their view point as to the construction of her rock garden.

The ladies are all so generous in helping one another in landscaping, planning lily pools, or what ever they under take.

The next meeting to be with Mrs. A. Braun, Tuesday, October 8.

Mokena Boys Plan Football Games

Now that the baseball season is almost over the boys are turning their thoughts toward the gridiron. Mr. Bethards who is a professional football player has offered his services as coach, and from what we have seen of him in action at the last practice, he sure seems to know his stuff.

The main obstacle the boys have had in the past years, was their inability to secure a suitable field located close to town, but this has been overcome as Mr. Bethards has had the property adjoining the Green Gables graded and is now an ideal gridiron.

All the boys wishing to play will please see Al. Heiman at an early date in order that a suitable day for practice may be arranged.

Mokena P. T. A. to Beautify Grounds

Cars Ditched; Several Hurt

BUILD LAKE COVERING SEVEN ACRES

The former Edward Geuther farm near Frankfort now owned by a Mr. Gilchrist of Chicago is the scene of great activity. The entire farm is being made into an ideal country estate. Trucks, a large force of men and machinery is being kept busy building new driveways, bridges and a big feature of the work is the construction of an artificial lake covering seven acres. A well is being drilled to supply the lake with water.

Mokena Council to Enforce Collection Of Vehicle Tax

Determined to make the vehicle tax to apply to every auto owner in the village limits of Mokena, the village council has instructed Karl E. Krapp, village clerk to turn over the names of nine auto owners in default of taking their licenses out for 1929, to Judge John F. Schultz for arrest and collection. The nine have received two notices from the village attorney to pay up, but have paid no attention to same, so the council found drastic steps necessary to enforce the vehicle tax ordinance. It is not fair for some auto owners to pay while others are trying to get by without paying.

Tinley Lions Take Up Bowling

Leave it to the Tinley Park Lions Club! Their latest accomplishment is the formation of a bowling league, the bowling being done at the new Homewood Recreation Parlors. They have one nite each week reserved for them, this being on Friday.

Last Friday, four or five automobile loads left Tinley at 7:30 p. m., full of enthusiasm and pep and returned at 10:30 after bowling three games each, still enthusiastic but much of the pep having been replaced by minor pains in the shoulders, hips, legs and back. Many of the bowlers of years back are again reborn in the art of holding a bowling ball.

The league will practice for two more Fridays and thereafter will enter into a tournament which will last until the end of the season.

TINLEY PARK TRIANGLE NOTES

Here we are, folks! Back to stay for quite awhile. The Club is up and doing, again. Read on and you'll see what it is all about.

The Club held its regular meeting last Monday, Sept. 23 at "Ye Olde Club House".

The new officers took their respective chairs. Henry Boldt, president, held a very interesting meeting. This fellow is a natural leader, so watch for some big things from the Club in the future. Let's give him a hand.

The other officers now in office are: Harold Monson (more commonly known as "Swede") vice-president; Ruth Funk, our new secretary; and Marcus Klepper, (Mickey, folks, Mickey!) treasurer.

The ex-officers, Marnell, Valeta, Alice Hartman and Edwin Hug have given their best while in office. They deserve a lot of credit. Give it folks, give it!

Ah! Here's the surprise. Folks! Come close and open your ears. The Triangle Club is going to give another dance. That's not all, folks. They're going to give you the best music in this part of the country. Sammy Berk's, melodious Rhythm Kings. Sammy'll be there to "croon" sweet songs to you. The date? H'm! Almost forgot. October 26.

It will be a Halloween Dance. 'Nof sed!

There will not be a football team this year as far as the Club is concerned. Having been voted on and defeated. But we'll have basket ball this year, folks. So wipe the frown off of your face and smile, smile, smile. See you next week.

Stone Donated to St. John Cemetery

Thru the efforts of County Treasurer Walter Krohn of Will County, the St. John cemetery has received three carloads of stone free from the state. Mr. Krohn's grandparents are buried in St. John's cemetery. He went personally before Gov. L. L. Emmerson and told him of the fine support Mokena gave the governor during the election and asked for the stone. Even tho Frankfort township has had more than its quota of state stone for highways, the governor issued an emergency order and the 3 carloads of stone have been received and spread on the driveways of the cemetery. The people of Mokena are thankful to both Mr. Krohn and Gov. Emmerson for their efforts in getting the stone.

TINLEY GARDEN CLUB NOTES

NEIGHBORS

"Great weather? You're right sir! Some cooler tonight, sir! I'll have to be painting that shed. Next year my TOMATOES will beat your POTATOES! A layer of gravel, you said? That tree's looking funny! Tinley Garden Club Appropriates $150 for Recreation Fund

The last regular meeting of the Garden Club was held in the beautiful home of Mrs. Emelia Rauhoff with almost a full attendance. Two very important subjects were discussed and voted on favorably at this time.

FIRST--- One hundred fifty dollars was appropriated as a recreation fund. It is believed that one of our local and very active civic organizations is making extensive plans for a recreation center in Tinley Park, and the Garden Club is proud to be first in contributing to this worthy purpose, and suggests that all other local organizations do the same so that this fine movement may materialize. There is a very definite need for a recreation center in Tinley Park, and it can be had with the proper co-operation. United we stand, divided we fall.

SECONDLY--- Club to form units The garden movement has become phenomenal in Tinley Park. There seems to be so great an appreciation of this civic cause and so many who would enjoy the work that the club is most happy to announce the forming of units in the near future. While much has been done by the Garden Club, we feel we have only laid the foundation and with still greater co-operation and continued effort can accomplish much more. Any woman who is interested in becoming a member will kindly communicate with the committee on same, Mrs. R. J. Hug, Mrs. W. B. Combs, Mrs. J. E. Swisher or any member of the club at the earliest.

Candy Vending Machines Subject To License Fee

The village board of Mokena has decided to enforce its ordinance calling for a special license of $10 year from any person, firm or corporation selling candy within the limits of the village. This hits the automatic gum and candy machines in the local Rock Island depot. The corporation which has the concession, is an eastern concern and the local agent of the Rock Island, J. C. Nielsen is going to be requested to notify the corporation to take out a village candy license or else quit operating their machines here, say board officials.

Ford With 6 Passengers Hits Drilling Outfit Parked On Highway; Hold Driller

A very tragic automobile accident resulting in the death of two young people and the serious injury of two others, occurred last Friday night at about ten o'clock when a Ford car with six young people in it crashed into the well drilling outfit of James Palmer parked on the concrete bridge spanning Hickory Creek to the north of Frankfort.

The dead:

VERNA SCHMIDT, 17 years old, of Frankfort.

HERBERT KOELLING, 19 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Koelling of Crete.

The injured:

Harry Hartman, 19 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. August Hartman of Crete, suffering from a dislocated hip, a possible skull fracture, internal injuries and bad cuts and bruises about the head and body. He is in the St. Joseph hospital, Joliet.

Arnold Frey, 33 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Frey of Crete, suffering from a cut under the right eye, cuts and bruises. He is in the St. Joseph hospital, Joliet.

Evelyn Zimmermann of Frankfort, and Herbert Oluf of Crete, the other occupants of the car, escaped injury.

The Schmidt girl and young Koelling were sitting on the extreme right of the front seat of the Ford, when the automobile struck the outer wheels of a trailer attached to the rear of the drilling outfit which was 108 feet long. The driller is a lengthy piece of machinery with a house on top of it and the trailer. The impact knocked the wheel off the trailer and hurled the automobile against the house part of the trailer, crushing the car like an egg shell.

The outfit is owned and operated by J. D. Palmer of Palos Park, 64 years old. He had been drilling wells near Joliet and was on his way to Palos when the accident occurred.

Palmer was arrested by sheriff's deputies, Joseph Krawl and William Pelkey of Joliet. Palmer said he had two lanterns on the rear of the trailer and they were found crushed at the smash. One lantern on the right side was red, the one on the left was white. Frey said he saw only one lantern which was near the house. At the time of the tragedy Palmer was in the house on top of the driller asleep and did not awaken until after the accident had occurred.

The crash was heard by neighboring farmers who hurried to the rescue. The driller was hauled by a steam engine and was parked on the bridge for the night so as to be near the water which was to have been pumped into the tank of the outfit the next morning it is said. Part of the outfit extended over the black line in the center of the pavement.

The inquest was held at Joliet on Monday and the coroner's jury recommended that Palmer be held to the Will County grand jury.

The funerals of the victims were held Tuesday, Miss Schmidt being buried at Monee, the Koelling boy at Crete. Both funerals were very largely attended. Miss Schmidt was keeping house for Supervisor Wm.

Mokena Man Buys Wisconsin Land

Peter Michaelson of Mokena who is accredited with being the originator of the idea to have Wolf road paved, has announced that he has purchased a farm of 40 acres and a house in Wisconsin for $3000. The property is wooded and a river runs thru it. The Wolf road runs by the place and will be paved there soon.

Mokena Spends $600 on New Streets

Building the streets around the new Mokena school property has cost the village $600.00. The coarse stone was furnished free by the state, but the village had to pay the freight on same, and also had to pay for the screenings, for grading the streets and for the unloading, hauling and spreading of the stone.

New Lenox Has 600 Population

New Lenox has had a wonderful development boom the past few years and it now has a population estimated at 600 which is 100 more than Mokena.

The past summer 25 new homes have been built in the subdivisions around New Lenox.

New Lenox School Crowded to Limit

The large number of new pupils enrolling in the New Lenox public school is crowding that institution to utmost capacity. If the attendance keeps on increasing another room will have to be added to the school.

FALL HATS FOR YOUNGSTERS; LONGER SKIRTS FOR EVENING

EVEN children are showing a dis-hat position to become increasingly hat conscious. To be convinced of this, observe little Miss Six or Seven, or younger or older as she seats herself before one of the diminutive mirrored tables with which every modern-appointed juvenile millinery department is equipped. Note her grown-up air as she proceeds to "try on" this hat and that, making com-

The hat of tweed, here again mother and little daughter have a like millinery interest. The tweed hats for tots which are made to match their little tweed coats, show many style variations, one of which is the strap of cloth run through a double slot as pictured in the lower left corner of the picture.

The youngster concluding this group is wearing a hat-and-scarf set of felt ments all the time. She likes this and she does not like that and they're not wearing so-and-so now, and the saleswoman is catering to her whims as seriously as if 'twere mother or big sister who was being hated.

Perhaps this poise and confidence is due to the hats themselves, for children's millinery is more and more taking on a sophisticated styling. It is characteristic of modern juvenile frocks and coats, also hats, that they reflect the fashion trends of their elders.

For example take the rolled-off-the-face "Pirate" brims which are the last word in Paris hats for this fall. See how jauntily the little girl pictured in the upper right corner of this group is wearing just such a felt model. What's more, the color of the felt is supposed to match this wee lady's coat just as accurately as all worked in the Italian way. That is, very bright colors are combined in most designful motifs.

For evening the young matron, the college girl, the debutante have all agreed in regard to longer skirts and soft shimmering materials such as ever spell the enchantment of sweet simplicity and the utterly feminine.

This frock in the lower illustration puts the theory into practice, qualifying very definitely in matter of beguiling details such as quoted above, as a proper gown for the smart dinner party. It is fashioned of sage green rayon satin, with tightly bound hips, slightly raised waistline and skirt which nears the floor with its over-draping.

Exquisite slippers add to the witchery of this costume. Much emphasis is being laid this fall upon color and decorative quality in slippers.

One of the Latest Evening Gowns.

the fashion books "lay down the law" in regard to mother's fall and winter costume.

The felt cloche in the opposite corner of the picture is machine-stitched row and row, both brim and inset crown sections, quite in an adult way. Some of these cunning bonnets use two colors of felt, for two-tone effects are in smart vogue.

In the center model we approach the knitted phase of the millinery question, for knitted effects are the rage for both adult and youth and for tiny tots, too. Not only are children's tams knit in the old familiar way, but they are just as often made of knit scarfing and that which is equally smart woven of narrow felt strips, often in multi-color effects.

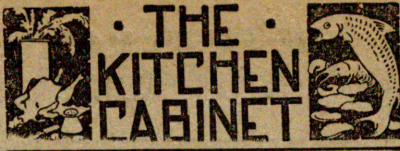

In a previous paragraph the raised waistline was mentioned in connection with the gown pictured. Fact is, we are at the threshold of an era of raised waistlines. Perhaps no subject is so widely discussed in couturier circles as this matter of raising the waistline, unless it be that of lengthening the skirt. With both of these drastic changes facing us there is no telling what the future will bring forth in the way of a revolutionized silhouette.

Whatever may be the fate of gowns, future and present, in regard to "lines," one thing is certain, colors and materials are growing increasingly lovely with the going and coming of the seasons. Just now it is rich dah-lia shades which are creating comment, both for evening and for daytime wear. Blueberry is a new shade widely featured. Pink tints grow in favor for formal evening wear. These pinks and flesh shades and creamy tones with a blush of pink have a subtle beauty which captivates, and they are as alluring expressed in terms of moire as they are in soft crepe-like satin or in tulle or in velvet the sheerness of which is one of the marvels of the age.

Some real surprising things are happening this season in fashion's realm, among which are gloves and trailing skirts, coarse net in black or colors for evening wear, tinted tulle made up over flowered taffeta, bolero effects for the formal evening dine-and-dance gowns.

SEASONABLE HINTS

Cauliflower, so well liked as a vegetable, ranks more highly used in pickle combinations or pickled alone. The dainty little flowerets should be carefully separated, washed and drained. To avoid insects turn the head upside down in a pan of salted water—any insects hidden will come out to the surface of the water.

Pickled Cauliflower.—Break into small flowerets after removing leaves and stalks. Cook in boiling salted water for ten minutes. Rinse in cold water to which a bit of lemon juice has been added. Pack the pieces in sterilized jars, dropping a long chili pepper in each jar for added attractiveness as well as flavor. Fill the jars with hot spiced vinegar and seal while hot. Prepare the vinegar as follows:

To each quart of vinegar add one-half cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful each of whole cloves and broken stick cinnamon, blades of mace, whole allspice, celery seed, peppercorns and two small sliced onions; boil 15 minutes, strain and use at once. One large cauliflower for each quart jar and one quart of vinegar will be sufficient for three-quart jars if well packed.

Apple Butter.—This makes a delicious spread which the children will enjoy as long as it lasts. Take good flavored early apples, pare, core, and put through the meat chopper together with a lemon, orange, and two ounces of green ginger root. Measure the fruit pulp and add an equal amount of sugar and a pint of water. Cook gently, stirring frequently until clear and thick. Can in pint jars. Seal while hot.

Wild Grape Jelly Spiced.—This is especially well liked to serve with game in the fall and winter: Wash four quarts of grapes and put into the preserving kettle with one pint of vinegar, a bag of mixed spices, cloves, stick cinnamon, and blades of mace. Bring to a boil, mash and cook until very soft, then pour into a jelly bag. Boil the juice 15 minutes, add three pints of sugar and cook until thick. Seal in glasses.

Wild grape jam is delicious to serve with meats. Use the half ripe grapes (remove seeds) and add three-quarters of their weight in sugar. Place in a kettle with two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and orange or lemon juice to start the steam. Bring slowly to the boiling point and cook a half-hour after boiling commences.

Apple Relish.

Take eight firm tart apples, four medium-sized onions, one cupful of raisins and one sweet red pepper. Peel and chop the apples as well as the raisins and other vegetables, mix thoroughly. Boil one quart of vinegar, two and one-half cupfuls of brown sugar, three teaspoonfuls of salt, four tablespoonfuls of whole mixed spices tied in a muslin bag. When the sirup is formed stir in the other ingredients and cook for one hour slowly. The sauce will be very thick when finished. Seal hot.

Ripe Cucumber Pickles.—Many prefer these to the watermelon pickles, which are such favorite sweet pickles. Pare ripe cucumbers and cut into long strips, removing the seeds. Cover with a quart of water in which three tablespoonfuls of salt have been dissolved, adding more water and salt to cover the cucumbers. Let stand several hours then drain and place in cold water. Make a sirup of one and one-half pints of vinegar, one pound of granulated sugar, one-half ounce each of stick cinnamon and whole cloves. Boil five minutes. Drop in the cucumber and cook until it is transparent. Tuck in small pieces of red pepper here and there and place in jars. Boil down the sirup and pour over boiling hot; seal at once.

Horseradish Relish.—Take three large grated roots of horseradish, add one tablespoonful of turmeric, a tablespoonful of celery seed, two tablespoonfuls of mustard, one-half cupful of sugar and enough boiling vinegar to make a pint and a half. Mix well and bottle. Serve after standing two weeks. This is a sauce which goes well with cold meats and chops. It is bitingly appetizing.

Chocolate Malted Milk.—Melt two squares of bitter chocolate, add four tablespoonfuls of malted milk dissolved and mixed with a little cold water then brought to a boil, add a quart of scalding hot milk, a pinch of salt and as much sugar as is needed to sweeten. Serve hot or chilled, with ice.

Those who are at all troubled with rheumatism should keep the blood free from acid by a daily use of oranges.

High Praise Conveyed in Three Short Words

Dr. William A. Muhlenberg, who founded the Church of the Holy Communion in New York, is claimed by a correspondent of The Churchman to be the author of the world's shortest sermon.

The occasion was the burial service for one of his trustees. He gave out his text, Micah 6:8, which reads "He hath shewed thee, Oh, man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" His sermon was, "He did this."

Recently The Churchman expressed the belief that a sermon by a Catholic priest in Toronto during the hot weather this summer was the record holder for brevity. That sermon, however, ran to 100 words.

See End of Tsetse Fly

As the result of experiments being conducted in the tsetse belt of Natal, the South African government is hopeful that an effective means of combating the ravages of the deadly tsetse fly has been at last discovered. A special poison in powdered form has been sprayed over donkeys. The tsetse fly, when it alights on the animal, absorbs the poison through its feet and dies. Reports so far received show that the experiments have been successful, giving hope that one of the worst plagues with which the farmer of South Africa has to contend is doomed.

Gold Stream Reduced

It has been a long time since the "forty-niners" made their rush for the gold fields of California, but still the mines continue to pour out a stream of precious metal, though the stream is lessening somewhat, judging from the 1928 figures.

The production of gold, silver, copper and lead for the year reached a total value of $15,381,783, a decline of about 9 per cent from the preceding year. This does not take into consideration the stream of gold pouring in to Hollywood.

Birds, Alligators, Her Pets

Miss Beatrice Harrison, whose cello playing induced nightingales to sing for the radio in England, is gathering a unique collection of pets at her beautiful home at Oxted. A number of alligators live in a tank in the dining room, basking on a tree trunk during the day. The room also contains a number of birds, including a singing parrot, and seventeen dogs.

SHE SAVED MAIL PILOT FROM CRASH

MRS. MABEL HITE

ON the night of February 17, 1928, Mrs. Mabel Hite, local agent of the Northwestern Telephone Company at Potter, Nebraska, was on duty alone at the telephone central office. A blizzard was raging at the time, but, nevertheless, she heard overhead the sound of an airplane and as this sound continued for some time, she decided the plane was circling over the town. On account of the unusual behavior of the plane, however, she came to the conclusion that the pilot must be lost or in distress, so she called the airfield some twenty miles east of Potter and was told that the most helpful action, under the circumstances, would be to mark out the boundaries of a possible landing field with red flares. These were obtained, and with the help of a garage man, a landing place was marked, thus enabling the pilot to land safely with his United States mail, refuel and continue on his way. If it had not been for what might be termed her "air-mindedness" the plane might have been in a smash-up and its pilot killed.

It is said that the first international telephone directory, printed in English, German and French, will be issued shortly by a Copenhagen firm.

OPERATOR AVERTS A RAILROAD WRECK

MISS ANNA C. YURECSKO

A WRECKED automobile blocking a railroad track in a deep cut; a train due to reach the scene almost immediately; the need of warning the engineer of the situation, and the lives of scores of passengers depending upon her doing the right thing at the right time—these were the factors which confronted Miss Anna C. Yurecsko, night telephone operator for the New Jersey Bell Telephone Company at Rockaway, N. J., on the night of June 24, 1928. She was on duty alone at the switchboard when a call came shortly after 11 o'clock from a telephone near the Mendes Bridge which spans the tracks of the Lackawanna Railroad near Rockaway. A woman's excited voice informed her that an automobile with two men had crashed through the bridge and had fallen to the tracks below, and that a train was soon due to reach the point. Unable to communicate directly with the only signal tower from which the train could be stopped, because there was no telephone line from the office to the tower and not sufficient time to send a messenger, the operator telephoned the warning to the train dispatcher's office, some fifteen miles away and, through that office, got word to the signal tower over the railroad's own private telephone line. There was barely sufficient time to flag the train and thus prevent another and more serious accident. As soon as the safety of the train was assured, she summoned police aid for the injured who had been rescued from the wrecked automobile.

Ruth McCormick Enters Race For U. S. Senate

The following letter has been received by the editor of The News-Bulletin from Ruth Hanna McCormick, announcing her candidacy for United States Senator.

September 23, 1929

Dear Mr. Semmler:

I am enclosing herewith the announcement of my candidacy for the Republican nomination for the United States Senatorship from Ill. The statement is released for publication on and after this date and I am sending it to you with the hope that you may find it of sufficient news interest to warrant its publication.

One of the things that have given me the greatest encouragement, both as a public officer and as a prospective candidate for membership in the Senate, has been the uniformly just and courteous attitude of the newspapers of the state. Needless to say, I am grateful and appreciative.

With kind regards,
Ruth Hanna McCormick

I am a candidate for the Republican nomination for the office of United States Senator from Illinois at the primary election, April 8, 1930.

Obviously, a candidate runs for office because he wants the office. But our system of choosing United States Senators wisely provides an opportunity for the voters of each party to examine the qualifications of all candidates before the party tickets are submitted to the people for election in the following November. In the campaign which I shall soon start I propose to speak to as many voters and visit as many of the communities of Illinois as my duties in the House of Representatives will permit. I shall then discuss fully those facts which may be held to affect my own qualifications for the Senatorship and those national and international issues on which I will be called upon to vote if elected to the Senate.

I appreciate deeply the offers of support which have come to me, many of them long in advance of my decision to seek the Senatorship. Those friends and all other citizens are entitled now to my assurance, unqualifiedly given, that my candidacy is free from any direct or indirect obligation except only the fundamental obligation of integrity in public service. No candidacy for this high office deserves to succeed if it is actuated by any purpose involving political reprisal or personal reward or by any influence whatsoever, other than a genuine wish to administer a public trust honorably and well.

He Carried No Life Insurance

A pathetic incident, which happened beside a newly made grave in a local cemetery furnished the sermon on life insurance, preached by the Rev. R. Keene Ryan at the Garfield Boulevard Presbyterian church Chicago, recently. Mr. Ryan said: "I am not an insurance agent, but I do not hesitate to say that modern insurance comes nearer to giving something for nothing, and making this something sure and certain, than any other known institution of our times."

"Indeed, so sure, cheap and certain has it become that no man, however poor, is without excuse who does not take advantage of the inducements offered him to lay up a little money to bury him when dead and provide for his afflicted and stricken loved ones when he is called away."

"It is nothing short of an unpardonable crime when a father and husband, with a wife and children depending upon him for support, neglects the sacred obligation; uses up each week his wages, and in a moment of time is stricken by death; compels his friends to bury him; leaves his family destitute and objects of pity and charity."

"Though I should live a thousand years I never could forget the picture of just such a scene as this I saw at Mt. Hope cemetery a few days ago -- the one that inspired this sermon. I was called upon to preach the funeral sermon of a man who was a clerk in one of the great railroad offices downtown. He had a beautiful home here in the city, a lovely wife and child. He lived a life of simple, happy ease."

"In vain did insurance agents importune him to carry just a little insurance. He lived each week to the limit of his small salary, saving nothing. He refused to become a member of any secret order on account of expense."

"One day last week he was sitting at his desk writing and whistling, when suddenly his whistling ceased, his writing stopped, his head dropped forward on his book, and his heart, ever light and gay, ceased to throb."

"When his accounts were footed up he had nothing. The boys in the office had to buy his coffin and defray all funeral expenses, and they were just as poor as he. One dollar a week invested in life insurance would have avoided all this."

"The saddest thing I think I ever witnessed in my life was his frail, delicate little wife, standing beside the open grave with the cold wind whistling through the barren trees sobbing as if her heart would break, with not enough money in her pocketbook to buy her lunch and pay her way back to her cheerless home."

"And after she had returned to her home, what then? No bread in the pantry, no coal in the bunker, and the next month's rent due. I have no sorrow for that dead husband. My sympathy is all for the poor, destitute, and unfortunate wife. It is a pity that such men cannot suffer the penalty of their own folly; but unfortunately, the suffering is endured by their luckless wives and innocent children."

The Chicago American

WORLD'S FAIR NOTES

Great enthusiasm for the international scope of Chicago's coming Century of Progress exposition prevails throughout Europe according to a report made yesterday to Rufus C. Dawes, president of the world's fair, by Homer J. Buckley, chairman of the celebration's committee on public information.

Mr. Buckley, who has just returned to Chicago after a seven weeks' trip through Germany, Austria, France and Czechoslovakia, declared in his report that everywhere he was called upon to explain the scientific theme of the world's fair, the people were loud in their praise of the unselfish spirit back of the project.

Hans Luther, chancellor of Germany, who heard Mr. Buckley address a luncheon meeting of the international Advertising Convention in Berlin, sought him out afterwards and expressed admiration for the manner in which Chicago is trying to make a contribution, from an educational standpoint, to all the nations of the world, the report said.

"The chancellor was so impressed that he declared his intention to attend the fair in 1933, and he told me that already there was a great deal of interest in the project among the German people," Mr. Buckley's report said. "This, considering the fact that we have not yet begun our foreign publicity campaign, is a most favorable indication."

Mr. Buckley, and the Chicago delegation of which he was the head, were the guests of the German government during their stay in Berlin, where he had the opportunity to outline the aims of the world's fair to 700 foreign newspaper editors and publishers.

"I told them that we were not egotistic enough to invite them to what might be called Chicago's one hundredth birthday party; that it was simply a happy accident that the greatest century of progress the world has ever known coincides with Chicago's span; and that we are offering the city as the scene where all the world may celebrate its accomplishments in every line of man's endeavor."

"Leon M. Renier, director of the Havas news agency, and Lord Riddle, London newspaper publisher, promised to give us all possible assistance and co-operation once we are ready to launch our European publicity campaign, and I had the same expressions of interest and help from many other journalists," Mr. Buckley reported.

Finding a marked improvement economically in all the countries he visited, Mr. Buckley declared he was greatly impressed by the manner in which the German people, in all lines, are working to bring themselves back to a pre-war footing.

Particularly noticeable, he said, was the cleanliness of everything in Germany, even the workmen's most humble shacks being spotless, and each having its little garden plot of flowers.

In Prague, he said, he was thrilled by the sight of the statue of Woodrow Wilson -- a monument to what he had done to make possible the freedom of the smaller nations of the world; and everywhere he heard praise of a former University of Chicago professor, Thomas G. Masaryk, president of the Republic of Czechoslovakia, for his exceptional qualities of leadership and ability.

Coloring Compound Is Taxable

Mrs. Myrtle Tanner Blackledge, Collector of Internal Revenue, has received information from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the effect that a United States District Court decision, handed down August 5, 1929, held that certain so-called artificially colored cooking compounds were taxable as oleomargarine. Therefore the manufacturers of these products will be placed upon the same footing as manufacturers of oleomargarine in respect to the payment of taxes.

The wholesale and retail dealers in these commodities are subject to the special tax as dealers in colored oleomargarine, and will be required to comply with Treasury Regulations No. 9.

The immediate enforcement of collection of these special taxes shall be made with respect to whole sale and retail dealers who sell such products on and after October 1, 1929. Instructions will be issued at a later date concerning taxes of this character which had accrued prior to October 1, 1929.

To Hold Crippled Children Clinic

Dr. John Mitchell will conduct a clinic for crippled children and adults, on Wednesday, October 2nd, between the hours of 8:30 and 12 A. M., in the Public Health Council rooms, Joliet, Illinois.

Departments under Gov. Louis L. Emmerson saved $207,032.47 to the state during the past six months by taking advantage of cash discounts allowed for prompt payment of bills. Possible discounts lost to the state in the same period amounted only to $68.84. The savings which will be effected in a year will run close to $500,000, Governor Emmerson in a letter sent to the directors of all departments early in March called attention to the fact that the state could save a large amount of money through prompt payment of bills in all departments. Since that time the department of finance has kept a close check on all departmental bills and at the end of each month has advised the director of the department just how much his department has saved or lost. Contracts are being let wherever possible with the cash discount clause included and this practice has resulted in an increased saving monthly.

In spite of 18-day diet fads and the popularity of golf, a rise of 15 per cent in the mortality from diabetes last year shows that people in general are eating too much and exercising too little, according to a statement issued by Dr. Andy Hall, director of the state department of health. Last year 1,750 people succumbed to diabetes in Illinois compared with 1,484 in 1928 and 1,025 in 1919, the lean year. This increase of 70 per cent in eight years is almost exactly parallel to the rise in general post war prosperity which has been accompanied by an unprecedented increase in rich food consumption.

Illinois corn crop prospects, shortened by the August drought, rated at six percentage points below the 10 year average, according to the joint report of the Illinois and federal departments of agriculture. Kitchen Policemen

MAYBE you think I'm going to refer to the cop who comes around to the back door to make love to the cook and the apple pie. But that isn't the only kind of man you may stumble on in the kitchen.

Nor do I mean those poor dough boys who were set to the sink and made to clean the kitchen when they misbehaved in the army. The officers put them on kitchen police duty, but they couldn't make them love the frying pan or dishpan.

My idea of the man who does real duty in the kitchen is that of the fellow who does his share of house-keeping, as far as cooking is concerned. There are lots of men who have come to the realization that kitchen work is no picnic for a woman, and these enlightened men have begun to share the responsibilities of the gas range and dishpan.

With the old-style marriage, which is rapidly growing extinct, there was a "division of labor," whereby the man worked from sun to sun, or from whistle to whistle, while woman's work was never done, because she wasn't running on scheduled time.

With the new marriage, the man finds it both possible and agreeable to do a certain amount of work in the shadow of the gas range. His wife may be doing her part in meeting household expenses with the L'il pay envelope, so it's only fair for him to match her work with his. If she's in an office, he can be in a kitchen.

This arrangement changes the meaning of the rolling pin. Time was when this kitchen implement was only a sign of the wives' disapproval. Now it means that men, too, have some interest in the place where their food is prepared.

Do you think that kitchen duty makes a man effeminate? I don't. It doesn't change a man when he does woman's work any more than it changes a woman when she does man's work. It's just a case of turn about is fair play.

I know of a man who is about as far from being effeminate as a man can be, judged by his body and brain. And yet that man takes his place at the sink, and isn't half bad when it comes to performing on the kitchen range.

He says he learned the trick in camp, where it was his job to get the breakfast. The family used to have strong coffee, soggy cereals, and robust muffins when he got the meal, but they liked the fun of seeing him play cook. Hall to the Chef!

Sweetheart Snatchers

A GIRL friend of mine is almost heart broken because another girl, one with dark hair and ruddy complexion, has taken a man away from her. Gentlemen do not always prefer peroxide.

Of course, my girl friend was not engaged to the man, still less married, so she has no comeback in the courts. She has nothing but tears. Now the experience which jolted the girl's heart gave me a little tap on the brain. It made me ask—Why?

Then, too, a man I know, and detest, was boasting the other evening how he had cut another guy out. Man number one didn't really care for the girl he'd snatched, but he thought it was such fun to rob his pal of his sweet potatoe. Such a world, and—Why?

I suppose it's the way of the world, and it means that to have is not to hold. To be held in the back seat of the auto doesn't mean that you'll remain as the life of that petting party. Now, why do men and women, who wouldn't think of shoplifting, indulge in this little crime of heart-picking?

Who steals my purse, as Shakespeare says, steals nothing but an old powderpuff, the fare home, and a bargain counter nankie. But who steals my sweetie lifts something that I may not be able to get back at the next dance. For men are hard to grab in these days.

But, why? That's the question that bothers my bob and knocks the permanent out of a wave which isn't a week old yet. I can understand a girl's motives when she swipes the other Jane's Steady, for girls have been taught to grab men, just as kittens are taught to hunt mice.

Nature keeps telling the girl that she must find a mate. Well, here's a man who is holding some other girl's hand. What of it? They aren't handcuffed together, are they? So grab that guy, and maybe there'll be a home in it for you. That's the way of the world where women are concerned.

You see, women are economic and practical. They are bound to think of themselves and the race. So they keep their eyes open for the Visible Means of Support, which is men. That's their excuse for sweetie-snatching, love-lifting, and heart-picking.

Men are not just the same, but they are naturally hunters who are waiting for the open season to roll around. A man shoots a deer for the fun of it, not for venison. He likes to show his power, his superiority over other men. Women snatch hearts because they have to.

Fresh Vegetables Saved for Winter

Are Far More Desirable for Table Use Than Canned Products.

Assurance of a fresh and healthful supply of garden vegetables for the winter months may be obtained economically by winter storage, it is pointed out by A. W. Binkley, of the department of horticulture at the Colorado Agricultural college.

Such root crops as potatoes, beets, carrots, parsnips, winter radishes, turnips and rutabagas may be stored easily, and in their fresh state they are more desirable than canned products.

Storing Root Crops.

Medium-sized, matured and perfectly dry roots, with the tops not cut too closely, are best for storing. It is stated. Only first grade vegetables should be stored.

One of the most satisfactory methods of storage for the small family is outlined by Mr. Binkley, as follows: Provide boxes of sufficient size to hold the quantity of vegetables desired. In the bottom of the box place a layer of fine moist sand (not wet), two inches deep. Place a layer of vegetables, then another layer of sand one inch deep. Continue until the box is filled, and place the box in a cool cellar. When the top layer of sand begins to dry out, sprinkle it with water to keep it moist.

Storing in Piles.

Vegetables may be stored in piles and covered with moist sand if there is enough room in the cellar, or they may be stored loose in bins in the cellar when larger quantities are to be stored. Cellar air must be kept moist by sprinkling the floor or by evaporation of water from vessels of water. Other methods and details concerning storage of onions, squash and pumpkins may be obtained by writing the Horticulture department at Colorado Agricultural college.

Practical Way to Keep Up Small Farm Orchard

This is the season when many of us wonder whether to cut down the old apple trees in the back yard or farm orchard or whether to really take them in hand and help them to produce decent fruit. We really should do one or the other, says a writer in the Illinois Farmer. Unsprayed, unpurged neglected fruit trees are a disappointment and an irritation to the owner and a source of disease and insect infestation to the orchards of neighbors who do care for their trees. Little fault can be found with the busy man on the average farm beset with surplus of work and shortage of help if he fails to take time to spray a few trees at the periods required for effectiveness. The farm spray ring is the only practical way we know to maintain the small farm orchard.

Many communities have such organizations and those communities always seem to have a local supply of good apples. Most of these spray rings are operated by farm bureau organizations. It is no heavy financial burden for a dozen or twenty farmers to provide equipment and materials for proper spraying and employ a man to do the job at the time it should be done, while it is usually out of the question for one farmer with 10 to 50 trees to do the same thing individually.

Reasons for Mulching

Crop of Strawberries

There are several reasons for mulching strawberries. Perhaps the most important is that it makes clean berries by keeping grit and dirt off of them. It helps to prevent growth of grass and weeds; and also tends to conserve moisture. In the colder climates it hinders heaving and breaking of roots by alternate freezing and thawing. Any clean material free from seed of noxious weeds may be used for mulching provided it will not pack down and smother the plants nor blow away due to coarseness and being light.

Agricultural Hints

Calves will do well on pasture when it is available.

In 1927, 25,000 miles of new highways were laid in America.

A campaign against the weedy vacant lot will benefit the community as a whole.

Crops on marshes are more subject to injury from frost than those on upland soils.

Among the field roots commonly grown, carrots are the most firmly anchored in the soil.

Generally alfalfa is not considered to be desirable for silage except when conditions make the curing of hay impossible.

Sheep manure is a very rich manure, containing in its pure state about twice as much plant food constituents as cow manure.

Bloody milk in cows is caused by the rupture of small blood vessels, by direct injury or violence, and by the presence of small bleeding warts in the milk cistern.

The Right Way to Redye Fine Silks

Textile makers always use special dyes for silk or wool. They know that is the best way. The makers of Diamond Dyes are the first to enable home dyers to follow this plan.

Next time you want to dye some of your more valuable articles of silk or wool, try the special Diamond Dyes in the Blue Package. They will give these materials clearer, more brilliant colors than any "all-purpose" dye. And they are just as easy to use as ordinary dyes. Like the white package Diamond Dyes, these dyes contain an abundance of the highest quality anilines. The blue package dyes silk or wool only; the white package dyes, or tints, any material. Either package; 15c, drugstores.

WOMAN SICK THREE YEARS

Helped By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Little Rock, Ark.—"I was sick for three years after my last baby came. I could hardly walk and could not eat nor sleep as I should because I was so nervous. I took seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound and used that number of bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and I am feeling just fine. I have a large family and do the work for all. Your Compound made me a well woman, and I have a happy home now. I always try to keep a bottle of the Vegetable Compound in the house and I tell everyone about it for I know it will help them."—Mrs. H. A. Adams, R. F. D. 5, Box 63, Little Rock, Arkansas.

THE DOUBLE CROSS

By A. E. THOMAS

"Jefferson," said Doris, "get the gardener—tell him to get what men he can—get them out of their beds—pay them anything they want. I don't care. We've got to search the grounds again from end to end. Get some boats—we've got to follow the shore of the lake. Get lanterns—searchlights—anything you can. We mustn't wait! Mr. Stanley may be laying out there dying at this very moment. Hurry!"

Thus electrified, the butler went out and shut the door.

Doris turned to Nina, took her by the hand and led her to the divan.

"Sit down," she said. "I want to talk to you. Rollin has gone away—we shall not see him again, any of us."

"Gone?" cried Nina.

"Yes, he leaves the country today forever."

"But look here," cried the other, "he can't go like this, without settling with me."

"He is going," repeated Doris, "and you can't help it. You mean to say that he's taken care of you all this time?"

Nina laughed. "Yes, he had to. He was afraid I'd blab to you if he didn't."

"I suppose you knew it was my money that he gave you?"

"I suspected it."

"You must have done rather well," commented Doris, with a tinge of sarcasm. "Have you saved anything?"

Nina showed her white teeth. "Oh, I've been thrifty," she admitted.

"Yes," commented Doris, "you don't look exactly poverty-stricken."

"But I say, what's up?" asked the other. "Here's the whole house in an uproar in the middle of the night, but no Mr. Stanley. And that butler was so scared he couldn't hardly talk to me."

"Never mind that," said Doris. "There's a question or two I have to ask you. You must realize that the middle of the night is a peculiar time for you to be calling on Mr. Stanley? What does it mean?"

"I don't know much more about that than you do," Nina replied. "I'll tell you everything I do know, and it's this. Somehow or other Mr. Stanley found out where I was living, and came to see me. He said that he had something very important to discuss with me, and that I must come here at precisely this time of night to do it. He didn't tell me any more than that."

"Didn't you think it peculiar?"

"I did—very. But he said that he would make it worth my while. In fact, he paid me very well in advance and promised that he would double the sum if I did as he said. Well, I knew that he was a very rich man and that I could rely on him to keep his word, so I'm here. And that's all I know."

"Very well," said Doris, "whatever he promised you, I will make it my business to see that you are paid. Come and see me when you like; but just now, if I were you, I wouldn't wait for Mr. Stanley any longer."

"All right; you seem to be the boss."

Doris glanced at the sleeping child.

"Poor little lamb, he's tired out," she said. "Well, now that his father has gone, I suppose I shall have to go right on taking care of him—only now I shall know it."

"You needn't worry about him," was the somewhat surprising response, "his father'll look after him. Oh, yes, and his mother, too. They're both perfectly crazy about him."

"What are you saying?"

Nina smiled broadly. "I haven't got any kid," she announced. "He's my sister's."

"What?"

"I borrowed him."

"Look here—!"

"Oh, yes," went on Nina cheerfully, "Mr. Rollin Waterman wasn't so clever by half. The best way to hold a man is through a kid. Well, just when I needed one, I didn't have any, but my sister did, so I borrowed him. Oh, you should have seen me! I looked quite sweet when Rollin came to see me, lying in bed, pale and interesting, all dolled up in a silk negligee and a boudoir cap, and this little chap in my arms. Rollin was quite touched for a moment—and later on he was touched a good many times."

"Good Heavens!" said Doris feebly.

"Yep," continued Nina, "Heaven will protect the poor working girl, but she can help herself a lot. Well, I'm off." She rose.

"Tell Mr. Stanley I was here, when you see him."

"Yes," said Doris, and her voice fell, "when I see him."

Nina opened the door. "He knows my telephone number, if he wants me." She went out.

CHAPTER XV

When Wilson left the library with the stricken Waterman, he found Jefferson and O'Hara sitting bolt upright upon the stairs. They rose hastily, and stood aside to let Waterman pass. The secretary detained the latter with his hand upon his arm, while he said to the butler:

"Jefferson, Mr. Waterman finds himself obliged to go to town at once. Go upstairs with him, help him dress, and pack his bag."

"Very good, sir," replied the butler. Waterman lumbered heavily up the stairs without speaking. Jefferson followed him.

As soon as they were out of sight, Wilson sat down upon the stairs and mopped his face with his handkerchief. The chauffeur stared at him in silence.

"Well," he said presently, "it's a h—l of a night, ain't it?"

"Eh?" said Wilson absently.

"I say, it's a h—l of a night!"

"Oh, yes, yes. But—it's over now."

"What do you mean, over?" demanded the chauffeur.

But Wilson did not enlighten him. Dazed as he was by the swift occurrences of the night, he made an effort to spur his faculties. Suddenly he thought of Nina. "Where's the girl who came to see Mr. Stanley?" he asked.

"Oh, she's in the reception room," replied O'Hara.

The secretary considered a moment. "Listen," he said. "There's a line of steamers plying between New York and South American ports with sailings every Monday morning. I happen to know because sometimes at the office we used to have to catch these boats with mail. I don't know which boat it is that sails tomorrow morning, but any morning newspaper will tell you. It's the Blue D Line. Mr. Waterman will sail on this liner. You are to see that he does."

"Hey, wait a minute," objected O'Hara. "You ain't asking me to kidnap the guy, I suppose?"

"Nonsense, what an idea!"

"Well, it sounds kind of queer to me."

"Nothing of the sort. Mr. Waterman is going of his own free will. If he decides at any time between now and the time the ship sails that he prefers not to go, that is his business. It is his present intention to take that boat. I want you to have the car at the door in five minutes. You will take Mr. Waterman to town. There will be a few hours to spend before the boat sails. What you will do with them is Mr. Waterman's business. Only this—if Mr. Waterman should change his mind, should he decide not to sail, turn him over to the nearest policeman and let me know by telephone at the earliest possible instant. Is that clear?"

"Sure, that's clear enough." The chauffeur rubbed his chin doubtfully.

"But how about this business in there?" He jerked his thumb over his shoulder toward the library door.

"You needn't worry about that," said Wilson. "Everything will be done that's possible. I shall call the police as soon as you're gone."

Suddenly he started to his feet.

"Oh," he said, "there's one thing more. Wait here."

In a moment or two he was back.

"Here," he said to O'Hara, handing him a bulky envelope. "When you see Mr. Waterman safely aboard the ship, give him this envelope—but not before. And stay there till you see the ship actually under way."

"And what then?" demanded the chauffeur.

"Why then call me up and I'll tell you what to do. Now go and fetch the car."

Again the little man collapsed upon the lowest stair. But not for long. For him the place was truly haunted. He rose and paced uneasily up and down the spacious hall, pausing every now and then to listen for a possible sound upstairs. Putting his hand in his pocket for the solace of tobacco, his fingers encountered something hard and cold. For the second time that night he handled the Colby necklace.

"Good Heavens," he thought, "to think I could have forgotten all about them. What a night! What a night!"

As he stood at the foot of the staircase staring at the jewels, a voice spoke from the hall above.

"Ah-h," it said, "so you've got 'em now?"

The secretary replaced the diamonds in his pocket without answering and Waterman came heavily down the staircase. The butler followed, carrying his bag.

Outside a gentle purring announced the arrival of the car. The butler opened the door. The three men went out into the night. O'Hara opened the door of the limousine. Waterman got in and fell limply among the cushions.

Wilson put his head in at the door and said: "Mr. Waterman, I have told O'Hara of your plan to sail this morning on the Blue D Line. When you go aboard the boat he will hand you an envelope containing the funds necessary for your journey. Upon your arrival at your destination, if you will cable your address, the arrangements already agreed upon will be made at this end. The Blue D liners are equipped with wireless, I believe, and I would like it understood that soon after sailing you are to send us a radio confirming your departure. And if I may say so—"

"Oh, for God's sake," cried Waterman, "shut up!"

Wilson stood back and closed the door. He nodded to O'Hara. The car disappeared swiftly in the darkness.

Wilson sat down heavily upon the stone steps, and watched the redness of the tall light until it disappeared around the bend in the road. The little man was exhausted. He must rest a moment before he could go on. The coolness of the night air was grateful to his aching head. He knew that what had been done so far had been well done. Even if he were never to see his beloved friend and protector again, at least he would have that satisfaction.

While he smoked a welcome cigarette, he reviewed the tumultuous events of the night. Presently, as his eyes became accustomed to the darkness, he became aware of a figure standing at the far corner of the house. His heart leaped up—he started to his feet and approached it.

"Well," he said, "what are you doing here?"

"I'm just waitin' for the lady that I brought to the house," said the man.

"The car's around the corner. Fine night."

"Oh—yes—" said Wilson. As he turned, the door opened once more and Nina emerged. In her arms she carried the sleeping child.

"Here's your passenger," he said, turning to the man, who disappeared in search of the car.

"Well, Pop," said Nina cheerfully, "here we are again, eh?"

"So it appears," he answered abruptly.

"Funny how old pals like you and me are always turning up, ain't it?"

"Very droll indeed," he answered.

"Funny kind of a deal I get here, though," went on the girl. "Mr. Stanley tells me to come here to see him in the middle of the night—makes it worth my while, too, I'll say—I show up, bringing me defenseless child, according to orders—and then no Stanley. Not what we had a nice little party, what with dear old Rolly and his Missus and the Oriental conjurer, and the dear old pop—but no Stanley. What's the idea?"

"I'm sorry," said the secretary coldly, "but I really cannot enlighten you."

"Ah, well, you always were a gabby old soul, weren't you?" she jeered.

"You were the one bright spot in the office in the old days—always so gay, you were. If it hadn't been for you I don't believe I could have stood it as long as I did."

The car rolled around the corner and pulled up in front of them. Wilson opened the door.

"Here," she said, "I can't get in and carry this." She thrust the sleeping child into Wilson's reluctant arms, and scrambled in. The dreaming boy awakened slightly, thrust his arms around the little secretary's neck, and murmured sleepily, "Is that you daddy?"

Nina heard him and laughed. "Ha," she cried, "that's the third daddy that kid's had tonight. He's well supplied, I'll say."

Wilson scarcely heard her jeering voice. Strangely and queerly and suddenly he was touched by the grasp of the tiny arms and the drowsy murmur of the childish voice. It was only a second.

"Good-by, Pop," cried Nina, and again Wilson stood alone in front of the gray old house.

Doris was scarcely conscious of the closing of the library door behind the departing Nina. Minutes passed, she never knew how many. All her faculties seemed paralyzed. But the mood altered, when it did alter, swiftly. Suddenly her brain was on fire. Action—action—that was it! Something must be done! She turned again to summon the butler. She would send for Wilson, and between them they would get to work. Even at this moment Stanley might be lying almost at the door, dead or dying! Her hand was on the door when she felt a presence in the room. Frozen into immobility she stood, unable to stir. A voice spoke.

"Well, Doris," it said quite cheerfully, "I thought you had gone to bed?"

Slowly she turned. Across the room, just within the open French window, Stanley was standing. Speechless, she stared. He came to her, smiling.

"What's the matter?" he said.

Then she found her voice. "Jim—Jim—Jim! Is it really you?"

"Of course, why not?" he spoke lightly.

With a cry she threw herself into his arms, sobbing hysterically. He did not try to stop her. He understood perfectly the strain through which she had been passing. But presently, when her sobs grew less hysterical he murmured, "Doris, Doris, my darling. Don't—don't cry—it's all right. Oh, it's been too much for you, hasn't it? But it's all right now. See, here I am; I'm all right. Look at me."

Still she clutched him tightly, so that he held her close and said no more. At last she drew away and murmured, "But we—we thought you were dead."

"Dead?"

"Why yes—yes—all of us—the Swami and everybody—"

With a click of the latch the door opened behind her. The Swami stood there. She turned and saw him. Quickly she ran to him, seized his hand and cried:

"Oh, sir, he isn't dead at all—Jim's not dead—here he is!"

The Swami bent his calm, benignant gaze upon her and said, "And why not?"

"What? You knew it all the time?" she cried.

"Knew what?" was the calm inquiry.

"Why, that Jim wasn't dead at all?" The Swami knitted his brows. "I do not understand, madame?"

"You don't understand? Why, when you left here five minutes ago you said—"

"The Swami raised his hand. 'I fear there is some mistake. I have not seen madame since noon.'"

"What?" she cried, falling back in amazement.

"I have been in my room absorbed in meditation for many hours. By-and-by, a little while ago, I hear strange sounds about the house. I open my door. The house is alight. It is long past midnight, so I come to see what it might be."

The violet eyes stared more widely than ever before. "You haven't seen me since noon?" she cried.

"No, madame—not since the noon meal."

"And you haven't been in the room for the last hour? How about the pistol, the blood stain on the rug, the strange dark woman and her child? How about them?"

"Wait, my friend," replied the Swami in a puzzled voice, and he turned to Stanley: "Is madame quite herself?"

"I think so," answered Stanley with a smile.

"But I do not understand one word of what she says!"

"Madame has had a trying experience, but she will be quite all right after a night's sleep, I am sure."

"Ah, and all else is well?" inquired the Hindu.

"Oh very; never was better!"

"Then perhaps I will retire."

"Do so," agreed Stanley, promptly.

"I regret that your meditations have been disturbed."

The Swami moved to the door. "Good-night, my friend; Madame, good-night." Silently he was gone.

Jim turned again to Doris. She looked at him with something of a glare. "Jim, Jim, am I going mad?" she cried.

Through the door behind the desk came Wilson at this moment. Huddled in his arm he carried a bundle of clothes.

Stanley grinned at him frankly. "Well, Frank, it was a great success, eh?"

"Immense," said Wilson, grinning back.

"Ten thousand thanks!"

"That's all right, sir," returned Wilson easily, but his face was still dead white. "What do you want me to do with these things?"

"Eh?"

"Your Hindu costume, sir?"

"I don't care—I'm through with them."

"In that case I think I'll go to bed, sir—I'm a little tired."

"Sleep well, my friend. Oh, by the way, O'Hara's gone?"

"Yes, sir. The car's just pulled out."

"Do you think he will go through with it?"

"I'm sure he will. What else can he do? You see, sir, there's this," and once more, and for the last time that night, Wilson produced the Colby necklace.

Stanley took the blazing beauty from his hands. He looked at Doris, still smiling. She came slowly toward him, smiling herself and for the first time. He clasped the diamonds about her throat. A moment the two men looked at her.

"Hm," said Stanley at length, clearing his throat. "Good-night, Frank."

"Good-night, sir," responded the little clerk, and he went out.

"Jim—Jim," breathed Doris faintly. "It was you—you were the Swami!"

"You clever, clever darling!"

Lesson for September 29

REVIEW: SIGNIFICANCE OF THE EXILE AND THE RESTORATION

GOLDEN TEXT—The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children. PRIMARY TOPIC—Stories Retold.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Stories Retold.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Some Great Men of the Period.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Providence in the Exile and the Restoration.

The grade of the class, the aptitude of the scholars and the genius of the teacher are factors which determine the method of review. For adult classes the following suggestions are made:

Study the lessons of the quarter as illustrating the philosophy of history in God's dealings with His people in their captivity and restoration. Assignment of topics should be made at least one week in advance. Only adult scholars should be expected to use this method. The following subjects might be assigned:

Why God Permitted Israel to Go into Exile.

What Changed Views of Life Resulted from the Exile.

The Bearing of the Exile Upon Prophecy.

The Relationship of Divine Chastening to Divine Love.

II. Character Study.

Assign the outstanding heroes of the quarter's lessons to members of the class to have them report. This assignment should be made at least a week in advance. Some of the outstanding characters for consideration are: Ezekiel, Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra, Zerubbabel and Malachi.

III. Summary of Contents.

This method is usable at all times and can be adapted to most of the grades. The following suggestions are made for carrying out this method:

Lesson for July 7—Before Ezekiel was commissioned as a prophet he was given a vision of the Almighty. After this vision he was given an experimental knowledge of God's Word.

Lesson for July 14—Ezekiel sets forth personal responsibility as bearing on the prophet and upon the people to whom he ministered. Ezekiel's responsibility was to hear God's Word and sound the warning. The people's responsibility was to hear and obey.

Lesson for July 21—Ezekiel is the prophet of hope. He ministered to Israel in captivity. God sent him to show to Israel the fullness of His plan for the world through them.

Lesson for July 28—Because Daniel made the Lord the arbiter of his life, he was able to make known the king's dream, with its interpretation.

Lesson for Aug. 4—While Belshazzar and his lords were engaged in drunken revelry, a mysterious hand recorded divine judgment.

Lesson for Aug. 11—Because of jealousy certain wicked men plotted Daniel's downfall. They trumped up a charge against him on the ground of his foreign religion. Though the foolish decree of the king was executed, Daniel was delivered and his accusers were cast to the lions and destroyed.

Lesson for Aug. 18—Though Israel went into captivity as a chastisement of the Lord, later He restored them.

Lesson for Aug. 25—In the restoration of the people to their own land, the first thing necessary was the provision of a place for the worship of God. As soon as this work was done, violent opposition was in evidence. That which God sets out to do shall be completed.

Lesson for Sept. 1—Through Zerubbabel the people were brought back and established in their own land, but they had gone far away from God. There was now need of a religious leader. Ezra was moved by the Spirit to lead them back to fellowship.

Lesson for Sept. 8—When Nehemiah heard of the distress of his brethren in Jerusalem he took the matter to the Lord in prayer. The Lord gave him favor with the king, who permitted him to go back and build the walls.

Lesson for Sept. 15—The method used in bringing back the people to God was God's Word. Because the Word was made plain, the people repented of their sins.

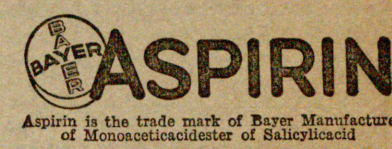

Lesson for Sept. 22—Malachi as an aid to Nehemiah in effecting reforms pointed out the sins of the people, namely, base ingratitude, a corrupt priesthood, mixed marriages, and robbing God by withholding tithes. He pointed to a Day of Judgment when righteous retribution would be meted out to the wicked and rewards would be given to the faithful.

Jesus Prophesied His Death

And Jesus went before them. And he took again the 12, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him, saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and the scribes; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him unto the Gentiles; and they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him; and the third day he shall rise again.—Mark 10, 32 to 34.

TINLEY PARK

Last Sunday was a wonderful day for George Schreiber our popular shoemaker. Mr. Schreiber is a member of the Chicago Lieder Tafel and 24 members of this society came out Sunday to spend the afternoon with Mr. Schreiber. They enjoyed true German hospitality and eats and all thoroughly enjoyed the visit.

Clyde Rice, our popular police magistrate has returned from a Wisconsin fishing trip. He was very successful in landing the finney tribe even tho a few big ones did get away.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hardinger has been visiting in Detroit the past week. Fred Goebel has been taking her place at the bank.

The R. N. A. realized about $70 from their bunco party Tuesday. Henry Goeb attended a bakers convention in Chicago Wednesday.

BACHELORS GROVE LUTHERAN CHURCH

William Greve, Pastor

Beginning with next Sunday, the services will begin at 10 o'clock. The annual Harvest Home Festival will be observed next Sunday.

The Rev. M. Feddersen, formerly pastor at Coopers Grove church occupied the pulpit while the pastor preached at a Mission Festival in Steger, Ill.

The Y. P. S. will meet next Thursday at 7:30 o'clock p. m.

The Ladies Aid will meet in the school on Wednesday, October 9. At the last meeting the date of the annual supper and sale was set for November 21, the Thursday before Thanksgiving Day.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Uthe of Tinley Park have returned from a wonderful trip thru Indiana and the state of Michigan.

The younger generation of the village seem to be very interested in foot-ball of late.

Is the Triangle Club going to surprise us with games this year or will it be necessary for the players to play with Blue Island or some other villages in this vicinity. According to the enthusiasm shown by various members of the younger set and the great number of fellows practicing every night on the west end of town. "Something must be in the air."

Mrs. Linn White, an authority on Gardens will give an illustrated lecture on "The Making of a Garden" at the Community Hall, Sept. 27th at 2:30 p. m. This lecture is to be given under the auspices of the Tinley Park Garden Club and should be very interesting, after all the interest of the people of Tinley have been aroused thru the great work of the Garden Club. Great improvements in the landscaping of many at one time so called "vacant lots" and unsightly back and front yards, can be attributed to the efforts of this great organization.

The Parent-Teachers Association of Tinley Park, held a very successful bazaar at the Community Hall on the afternoon of the 23rd the proceeds of which are to go toward the purchase of new bookcases for the school.

The Lions Club of Tinley at their meeting last Monday evening were honored with the presence of Mr. Cowan, local postmaster of Palos Park. Mr. Cowan one of the gentlemen instrumental in establishing the Southwest Highway, gave a brief talk on "The South Town Chamber of Commerce" its workings and its part in the better roads program for Southwest Cook County. He invited a delegation of Tinley Lions to the next meeting of this organization.

The Lions Club of Tinley Park at their meeting Monday night placed great discussion on the subject of placing signs at various intersections to protect the children of the village. They are also endeavoring to have the Chicago Motor Club place "Slow" signs near the school.

Discussion was had on the purchasing of a Lions Club banner and Messrs. Vogt and Funk were appointed on a committee to report on prices, etc., at the next meeting.

Some of the Lions are to show their wares at the "Jungle Party" to be held at the Cherry Hill Golf course for the Championship of Lions Clubs of Cook County.

Some time ago it was brought up at a Lions meeting that the county had named the street thru Tinley Ridgeland avenue, whereas the village survey showed it to be Oak Park avenue and named it accordingly. A letter was written to Major Quinlan of the Highway Department of the county concerning this and a reply received that he was in favor of the change and advised that it should be taken up with the County Commissioners was read. A resolution was passed to this effect and the secretary was authorized to write to the County Board members.

The Lions members also passed on the style of numbers to be purchased for completion of the house numbering. This is to be a black baked enamel background and a white luminous style numeral.

Great stress was also laid on the subject of a Halloween Party for the Lions and their wives. Plans and arrangements are incomplete as yet, due to the fact that Lion Clyde Rice has answered the call of the fish in the north woods and has just returned. He is one of the members of the committee in charge.

The Royal Neighbors of Tinley held a bunco party the evening of the 24th. It was well attended and a good time was had by all.

MOKENA

Lambrecht Home

The following item of interest to Frankfort and Mokena friends of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lambrecht appeared in the Chicago Heights Standard where Mr. Lambrecht is employed:

"Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lambrecht of Matteson became the proud and happy parents of a nine and one-half pound son Tuesday afternoon September 17th, the birth taking place at the St. James hospital. With both Mrs. Lambrecht and the new member of the family circle reported to be getting along nicely Arthur took occasion to visit with fellow employees at "The Standard" where he spread the important news and received hearty congratulations. Mr. Lambrecht has been one of the leading singers of the community for several years and it is said his son already gives evidence of following in his footsteps in that respect."

Mr. Lambrecht is also a former employee of The News-Bulletin. Mrs. Lambrecht was formerly Adeline Eichmeyer of Frankfort.

BY EMMA KLEPPER.

The Tinley Park P. T. A. kindly thank all for the co-operation of everyone in helping to make the bazaar held in the Community Hall, September 23, 1929, a success.

To help purchase bookcases needed in the school rooms is the aim of the Tinley Park P. T. A.

Profits from the bazaar were $41.50. After the bazaar an executive meeting was held.

The next regular meeting will be held in the school, Friday, Oct. 4th, at 2:00 p. m. We urge new members to join and will be happy to see new members at our next meeting. The fees are fifty cents ($5.00) a year. Let's all get together to help the children win the banner for the coming month.

An answer may be found for the many questions asked by children that have reached the age of a hundred "Whys" and "Hows" by parents reading books that may be secured from the P. T. A. Library.

Donations of books for the library will be most gratefully received. Mrs. Jennie Klepper is librarian.

MRS. HENRY BRUEGGEMANN WINS PRIZE

Mrs. Henry Brueggemann won the Gladiolas contest sponsored by Mrs. Wm. Funk and was presented with a beautiful china pansy basket. Mrs. Dini received an attractive miniature hanging basket for having the only freak plant. At the close of the meeting Mrs. Rauhoff, assisted by Lois Klepper and Fern Fulton served coffee and cake. The huge cake beautifully decorated with yellow roses was almost too pretty to eat. (But we ate it!) The next regular meeting of the club will be October 18 at 2 o'clock at the home of Mrs. H. L. Duff, 12131 Wiley Avenue, Blue Island, Ill.

THE MYSTERY IN AN AUTUMN LEAF

Someone has written: "To the artist the falling leaf of the deciduous tree is a thing of beauty; to the small boy whose chore it is to rake the garden, it is only a nuisance; to the chemist it represents a marvelous achievement that he could not duplicate in his laboratory, however earnestly he tried; and to the food economist and statistician every brilliant red and every rich brown represents a waste of saccharine substance that in the aggregate would be sufficient to sweeten the coffee of the world." What autumn leaves mean to us depends upon our point of view. Autumn leaves! You puzzle us, you charm us, blow into our faces and protect our gardens.
